Wells Mills County Park

At over 900 acres, Wells Mills County Park is Ocean County's largest park. Wells Mills County Park boasts a variety of unique habitats including a freshwater lake, streams, bogs, Atlantic White Cedar and Maple-Gum swamps, and Pine-Oak uplands.

Park Highlights

- Wells Mills Nature Center
- Over 16 miles of marked hiking/walking trails
- Boating and fishing access
- Picnic area
- Playground
- Canoe rentals
- 1,400 square foot exhibit room
- 50 seat lecture room for educational groups

The Wells Mills Nature Center

The Wells Mills Nature Center was designed to meet the ever-growing need for environmental education and recreation in Ocean County. Exhibits inside the Nature Center interpret the local history, flora and fauna of Ocean County. The Elizabeth Meirs Morgan observation deck provides a fine view of Wells Mills Lake and the surrounding Pine Barrens from atop the building.

Wells Mills County Park History

The history of the park dates back to colonial times when Elisha Lawrence, a zealous Tory, lost ownership of this land after fighting on the side of the British during the Revolutionary War.

James Wells is credited with damming Oyster Creek and building the first sawmill on the property in the late 1700s. Large stands of Atlantic White Cedar were harvested for lumber. This wood was prized for use in shipbuilding, home construction and fences for its light weight and rot resistance.

The Estlow family acquired Wells Mills during the late 1800s. They were responsible for building two sawmills next to one another thus the plural nature of the park's name. Other activities that occurred on the property include shingle making, firewood cutting and sphagnum moss gathering. Clay mining was also undertaken by Tilden Estlow, who was one of the last Estlows to live at Wells Mills.

In 1936, the land was sold as a recreational retreat to the Conrad family who were prominent local businessmen. Charles M. and Grove Conrad, Jr. built the rustic cabin that overlooks Wells Mills lake during the winter of 1937. The Conrads gave life rights to the Estlows, who remained on the property to live and work. Tilden Estlow died in 1951, after which his wife Lydia moved to Waretown.

Due to increasing taxes, the land was sold to the New Jersey Conservation Foundation in the late 1970s. This precluded any development plans for the tract. The Ocean County Board of Chosen Freeholders purchased approximately 200 acres from the Foundation in 1985. Additional land was acquired from Ocean Township and other private landowners, increasing the park's size to over 900 acres.
